

Alexandria Gazette.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, SEPT. 6, 1882.

How the Sultan was interviewed.

When the Herald printed its interview with the sultan of Turkey the world held up its hands in astonishment. A monarch guarded as is his serene highness, one as reticent as he, consent to be interviewed by a newspaper reporter? Impossible! There must be some mistake! Yes, there was a mistake. His most gracious majesty, the Sultan, was not interviewed by a reporter, nor even a correspondent. The person who performed this daring and diplomatic deed was none other than the Herald's undaunted proprietor. Mr. Bennett was lying off Constantinople in his yacht, and entertaining among others the United States Minister to Turkey, General Lee Wallace. General Wallace is on the most pleasant terms with the Sultan, and he told Mr. Bennett that he thought it would be a good time to interview him on the war in Egypt. Mr. Bennett thought so too, but how was it to be done? "Leave that to me," said General Wallace.

The Sultan, it must be known, is one of the most ardent admirers of America and everything American. Gen. Wallace told him that the proprietor of one of the biggest papers in America was lying off Constantinople in his yacht. His serene highness had heard of the Herald and of Mr. Bennett, and he expressed a desire to see him and talk with him. Gen. Wallace in the most diplomatic manner, suggested the propriety of an interview, the result of which might be made public through the columns of so representative a paper. This rather pleased the Sultan, and he appointed a day and sent for Mr. Bennett. You may be sure that Mr. Bennett's journalistic instincts arose to the situation. He took his secretary, Mr. S. S. Chamberlain, with him, and set forth for the palace. While he drew the Sultan out, Mr. Chamberlain took notes. This meeting had two results—the famous interview in the Herald, and the conferring of the order of Osmanli upon Mr. Bennett, who is now Bennett Bey.—Correspondence Boston Gazette.
